Letter of Recommendation

It is with great pleasure that I write this letter of recommendation in support of Suveer Saigal, a Grade XII student of The Shri Ram School, Moulsari, whom I have had the privilege of mentoring during his association with Navjyoti India Foundation. Throughout his engagement with the Foundation, Suveer consistently demonstrated exceptional intellectual curiosity, leadership potential, empathy, and an unwavering commitment to creating meaningful and sustainable social impact.

Suveer joined Navjyoti India Foundation in January 2025, where he immersed himself in our livelihood and women empowerment initiatives. From the outset, he displayed remarkable maturity by investing time in understanding the realities faced by women from underprivileged communities who possessed exceptional artisanal skills but lacked access to branding, market linkages, business development support, and sustainable livelihood opportunities. Rather than offering immediate solutions, he adopted a thoughtful and participatory approach, carefully observing, listening to the beneficiaries, and gaining a deep understanding of the challenges associated with running community-based micro-enterprises.

One of Suveer's most noteworthy contributions was his instrumental role in conceptualising and establishing Project Kali, a social enterprise designed to promote environmentally sustainable, women-led entrepreneurship. Working closely with nearly 25 rural women entrepreneurs, he contributed significantly to developing the enterprise's brand identity, including its name, logo, packaging design, and overall visual communication, while also supporting the establishment of its digital presence. His approach to branding extended beyond aesthetics; he recognised that a strong brand identity could instil confidence, foster ownership, and enable women artisans to build credibility in competitive markets. His ability to guide discussions on product positioning, pricing strategies, customer perception, and storytelling reflected a level of strategic thinking rarely seen at his age.

In addition to enterprise development, Suveer collaborated closely with our beneficiaries to design and facilitate skill development workshops centred on environmentally sustainable products. Through these initiatives, women were trained to transform discarded flowers and cow dung into handcrafted incense sticks, produce decorative soy wax candles using pressed flowers, and create natural Holi colours from repurposed flower petals and leaves. These interventions effectively integrated environmental sustainability with livelihood generation by promoting circular economy practices while creating viable income-generating opportunities. Under his guidance, the products were refined, professionally packaged, and prepared for commercial markets.

Towards Self-Reliance

The impact of Project Kali became particularly evident during the Holi season, when the women entrepreneurs collectively produced and sold more than 400 festive gift boxes, generating approximately ₹60,000 in revenue through carefully planned WhatsApp marketing campaigns and community outreach initiatives. While the financial achievement was significant, the transformation in the confidence and entrepreneurial mindset of the participating women was even more remarkable. Women who had previously perceived their craftsmanship as a household activity began identifying themselves as entrepreneurs with viable businesses.

Recognising that sustainable entrepreneurship extends beyond product development, Suveer independently designed and delivered a series of financial literacy, digital literacy, and entrepreneurship workshops benefiting nearly 60–70 women. These sessions addressed practical aspects of enterprise management, including budgeting, costing and pricing, digital payments, WhatsApp Business, customer engagement, and the responsible use of emerging Artificial Intelligence tools to strengthen small businesses. His ability to simplify complex concepts into practical, relatable, and actionable learning experiences resulted in highly engaging sessions, many of whose learnings continued to be implemented by participants long after the training concluded.

Throughout his association with Navjyoti India Foundation, Suveer consistently exhibited outstanding professionalism, integrity, humility, and a genuine passion for community development. His exceptional analytical abilities, innovative thinking, collaborative spirit, and commitment to empowering underserved communities distinguish him as a young leader with immense potential to create lasting social impact.

I have every confidence that Suveer will continue to excel in his academic pursuits and future professional endeavours. I offer him my highest recommendation and firmly believe that he will make meaningful contributions to any institution or organisation fortunate enough to benefit from his dedication, leadership, and vision.

I wish him every success in all his future endeavours.
