India Vision Foundation
#SaveTheNextVictim

To Whom It May Concern,

It is with immense pleasure that I write this letter in wholehearted support of Suveer Saigal, a Grade 12 student at The Shri Ram School, Moulsari, whose compassion, entrepreneurial mindset, and unwavering commitment to restoring dignity through economic empowerment have made a remarkable impact on India Vision Foundation. Having worked with numerous young volunteers over the years, I can confidently say that Suveer is among the very few who instinctively understands that meaningful rehabilitation is not achieved through volunteering alone, but by creating sustainable opportunities that allow individuals to rebuild their lives with confidence and independence.

Our collaboration began while conceptualizing Suveer's brainchild—Project Navjeevan, an initiative dedicated to supporting formerly incarcerated and undertrial women as they reintegrate into society. The women we work with often face overwhelming barriers—social stigma, financial insecurity, and limited employment opportunities despite possessing valuable skills and an extraordinary determination to rebuild their futures. From the outset, Suveer approached this challenge with remarkable maturity. Before suggesting solutions, he spent weeks listening to the women, conducting one-on-one conversations to understand their aspirations, fears, and the practical obstacles preventing them from becoming financially independent. His empathy and willingness to understand their stories first became the foundation upon which Project Navjeevan was built.

Suveer played a central role in launching the initiative alongside our team, supporting the inauguration of the program and helping create an environment where the women felt respected, heard, and hopeful. He went on to design and conduct 5 intensive workshops on entrepreneurship, financial literacy, digital inclusion, marketing, and small business management, equipping participants with practical skills required to establish and sustain their own enterprises. His sessions were never theoretical; they focused on helping women understand pricing, budgeting, digital payments, customer outreach, government schemes, and the use of accessible digital tools that could simplify and strengthen their businesses.

Recognizing that training alone would not translate into economic independence, Suveer worked tirelessly to mobilize resources for the initiative. Through persistent outreach and partnership building, he successfully secured ₹2 lakh in funding, enabling the launch of a pilot supporting five women entrepreneurs. Rather than distributing financial aid, the funding was strategically invested in establishing livelihood infrastructure tailored to each beneficiary's aspirations. Sewing machines, beauty parlour equipment, food carts, kitchen appliances, raw materials, and business essentials were procured to help women establish enterprises ranging from tailoring and beauty services to home-based food businesses.

The outcomes have been deeply encouraging. What began as a pilot supporting 5 women has today expanded into Project Navjeevan, directly impacting over 40 formerly incarcerated and undertrial women through mentorship and workshops. Women who previously had little or no independent source of income are today running their own micro-enterprises with confidence. Across the cohort, women who previously had little or no independent source of income are now collectively generating an average of ₹6,000–₹8,000 per month.

India Vision Foundation
#SaveTheNextVictim

More importantly, many have progressed from depending entirely on external support to running businesses that contribute meaningfully to their households. I still remember one participant quietly sharing after a workshop, "For the first time, I feel people are investing in my future instead of judging my past." That moment captured the true essence of what Suveer helped build: renewed confidence, dignity, and the belief that a second chance can become a lasting livelihood.

What impressed me most throughout this journey was Suveer's remarkable sensitivity. He never viewed these women through the lens of their past; instead, he saw entrepreneurs waiting for an opportunity. He consistently treated every participant with dignity, ensuring that every business reflected their own aspirations rather than externally imposed ideas. His ability to combine empathy with structured problem-solving is extraordinarily uncommon, particularly in someone of his age.

Perhaps the most moving contribution Suveer made extended beyond entrepreneurship itself. Recognizing that rehabilitation also requires changing public perception, he independently conceptualized, directed, and produced an 18-minute documentary film, 'Rebuilding Freedom' capturing the deeply personal journeys of formerly incarcerated women as they navigated stigma, rebuilt their confidence, and established businesses through Project Navjeevan. The film celebrated resilience, dignity, and second chances. The documentary has since received widespread recognition, winning Best Young Filmmaker Under 18 at the Indian Independent Film Festival, Best Student Short Film at the Makizhmithran International Film Festival, Best Student Film at the Crown Wood International Film Festival, and many more. Today, India Vision Foundation has proudly adopted this film as the flagship awareness piece for Project Navjeevan, using it across multiple public screenings and stakeholder engagements to advocate for rehabilitation through entrepreneurship.

Suveer possesses a rare combination of entrepreneurial thinking, emotional intelligence, and social responsibility. He has shown us that meaningful impact is created not simply by solving immediate problems, but by building systems that restore dignity, opportunity, and hope. I have every confidence that he will continue creating transformative change wherever his academic and professional journey leads him, and I recommend him with my highest enthusiasm.

Sincerely,

Monica Dhawan
Director
India Vision Foundation

communication@indiavisionfoundation.org.in +91 011-4054-7520
56, Uday Park, New Delhi - 110049
https://indiavisionfoundation.org
India Vision Foundation India
India Vision Foundation
Indiavisionfoundation
IVFoundation